Motley Fool analyst Morris Pearl has lauded Western Alliance's performance and market outlook in a commentary pointing to the bank's strengths in public finance, hotel franchise finance and banking for homeowner associations. The new analysis was featured on Fox Business.

Writes Pearl, "The point of being in these businesses (and others) is that they involve complicated, custom deals that don't fit into cookie-cutter loans from the big banks. And Western Alliance has the added advantage of being small enough that there are few people between a businessperson who needs money and senior executives who can decide to approve a loan, thereby attracting businesses that value high-quality service."
